Ohio Passes Stand Your Ground Law Eliminating Duty to Retreat, Meaning Whites Can Now Defend Themselves Against Blacks

The Republican governor of Ohio Mike DeWine has just signed into law, to take effect in 90 days, a stand your ground law. For those unaware, stand your ground laws regard self-defense with firearms, and basically say that you have no duty to retreat before defending yourself. Duty to retreat laws also exist which say you have to have tried to get away from the aggressor before self-defense is legal.

> Senate Bill 175, sponsored by Republican State Senator Tim Schaffer, amends Ohio law to expand locations in which a person has no duty to retreat before using a firearm in defense. Previously, the so-called “stand your ground” law applied only in a person’s residence or vehicle. The newly-signed legislation removes those conditions, expanding it to any place in which the person lawfully has a right to be. The possibility of retreat will no longer be a factor in determining whether or not the force used in self-defense, or defense of another, was necessary to prevent injury, loss, or risk to life or safety.

The response to this legislation has been overwhelmingly negative, mostly from anti-gun groups who say that it increases crime, mass shootings and black murders. While it is true that more blacks are killed in states with stand your ground laws, and while it is also true that stand your ground laws disproportionately lead to more blacks being killed, the reason is more than simple. And that reason is that blacks commit more crime and are more likely to be involved in situations of aggression towards others. When stand your ground laws exist, it means that White people have the right not to be prosecuted when they defend themselves from black interracial violence. Leftists don't exactly put it that way, they focus on the poor blacks question, but that is the other side of the dynamic.
